Gentlemen:-

The Milwaukee Public Museum has referred me to you. I have about 1100 coins, about 500 of which are Roman and the remainder U.S. & German and others.

I am interested in trying to find out their value. Could you give me any suggestion as to how to go about this. Also do you know of any firm or person who might be interested in the purchase of same.

Our museum has not one on their staff who is particularly interested in coins and therefore they are not in a position to assist me.

Any information that you can give me on the above will surely be appreciated

Yours truly
Louis Reinhard

Dear Sir:-

The problem of disposing of an entire collection of coins at one time is somewhat difficult as few collectors desire to purchase complete collections, preferring to form their own collections. You would probably get better results by selling directly to a coin dealer who would take your coins entirely off your hands, and while he might not pay you as much as might be secured by selling to private collectors, he would save you the time necessary for getting in touch with the various collectors. I am enclosing a list of reputable coin dealers with whom we have had satisfactory business relations.

Very truly yours,

Assistant to Curator.
